REVISION INTRODUCES NEXT GENERATION BULLET ANT[®] TACTICAL GOGGLE SYSTEM

Essex Junction, VT, USA (January 11, 2010) – Revision, leading developer of ballistic protective eyewear for military and law enforcement forces worldwide, introduces a second generation Bullet Ant Tactical Goggle System. This model offers the same low-profile relief for optimal gear compatibility but with these upgrades: increased lateral and temporal field-of-view; enhanced facial fit and softer frame material for improved comfort; a wider headstrap for greater helmet retention; and more aggressive styling.

“In keeping with Revision’s philosophy that good is never good enough, we’ve redesigned the the Bullet Ant Goggle for added performance and superior comfort,” Explained Jonathan Blanshay, CEO of Revision. “The strongest protection and best optics are only assets if they are worn, so eye protection must fit well and be comfortable. That’s exactly what we’ve done here—improved the system to surpass these user expectations.”

The Bullet Ant Tactical Goggle features flawless optics, OcuMax[®] coated interchangeable lenses for fog-free vision, and is 100% UV protective for military, tactical and recreational performance. An optional prescription (Rx) carrier, also compatible with the Sawfly[®] Eyewear System and the Desert Locust[®] Goggle, is available for vision correction.

The move to the generation II Bullet Ant Tactical Goggle takes place this January. And, despite the many product improvements, pricing will remain the same at $129.99 MSRP for the deluxe model.
